

Selling Graphic Novels to Kids

ComicsPRO SDCC 2019

Barnes & Noble knows...

- In June 2018, announced plans to add dedicated sections for kids graphic novels into each store, with approximately 250 titles in this category
- “Readership of graphic novels continues to grow and expand, with kids flocking to this popular genre. Graphic novels are a way for kids to appreciate both reading and art, and the breadth of talent for both authors and illustrators in this category is amazing.”
 - Stephanie Fryling, B&N VP Merchandising, Children’s books

Libraries know...

- “Building a graphic novel collection can pull up the circulation of an entire section.”
 - Christian Zabriskie, assistant coordinator of young adult services at the Queens Library in New York
- “...graphic novels are among the most circulated categories, right up there with teen paranormal romance and DVDs.”
 - “How Graphic Novels Became the Hottest Section in the Library”: Publishers Weekly, May 3, 2013
- The mere presence of comic books in a collection increased library use 82%, with a 30% increase in the circulation of non-comic book material
 - “Spider-Man at the library”: School Library Journal, August 1981

Publishers know...

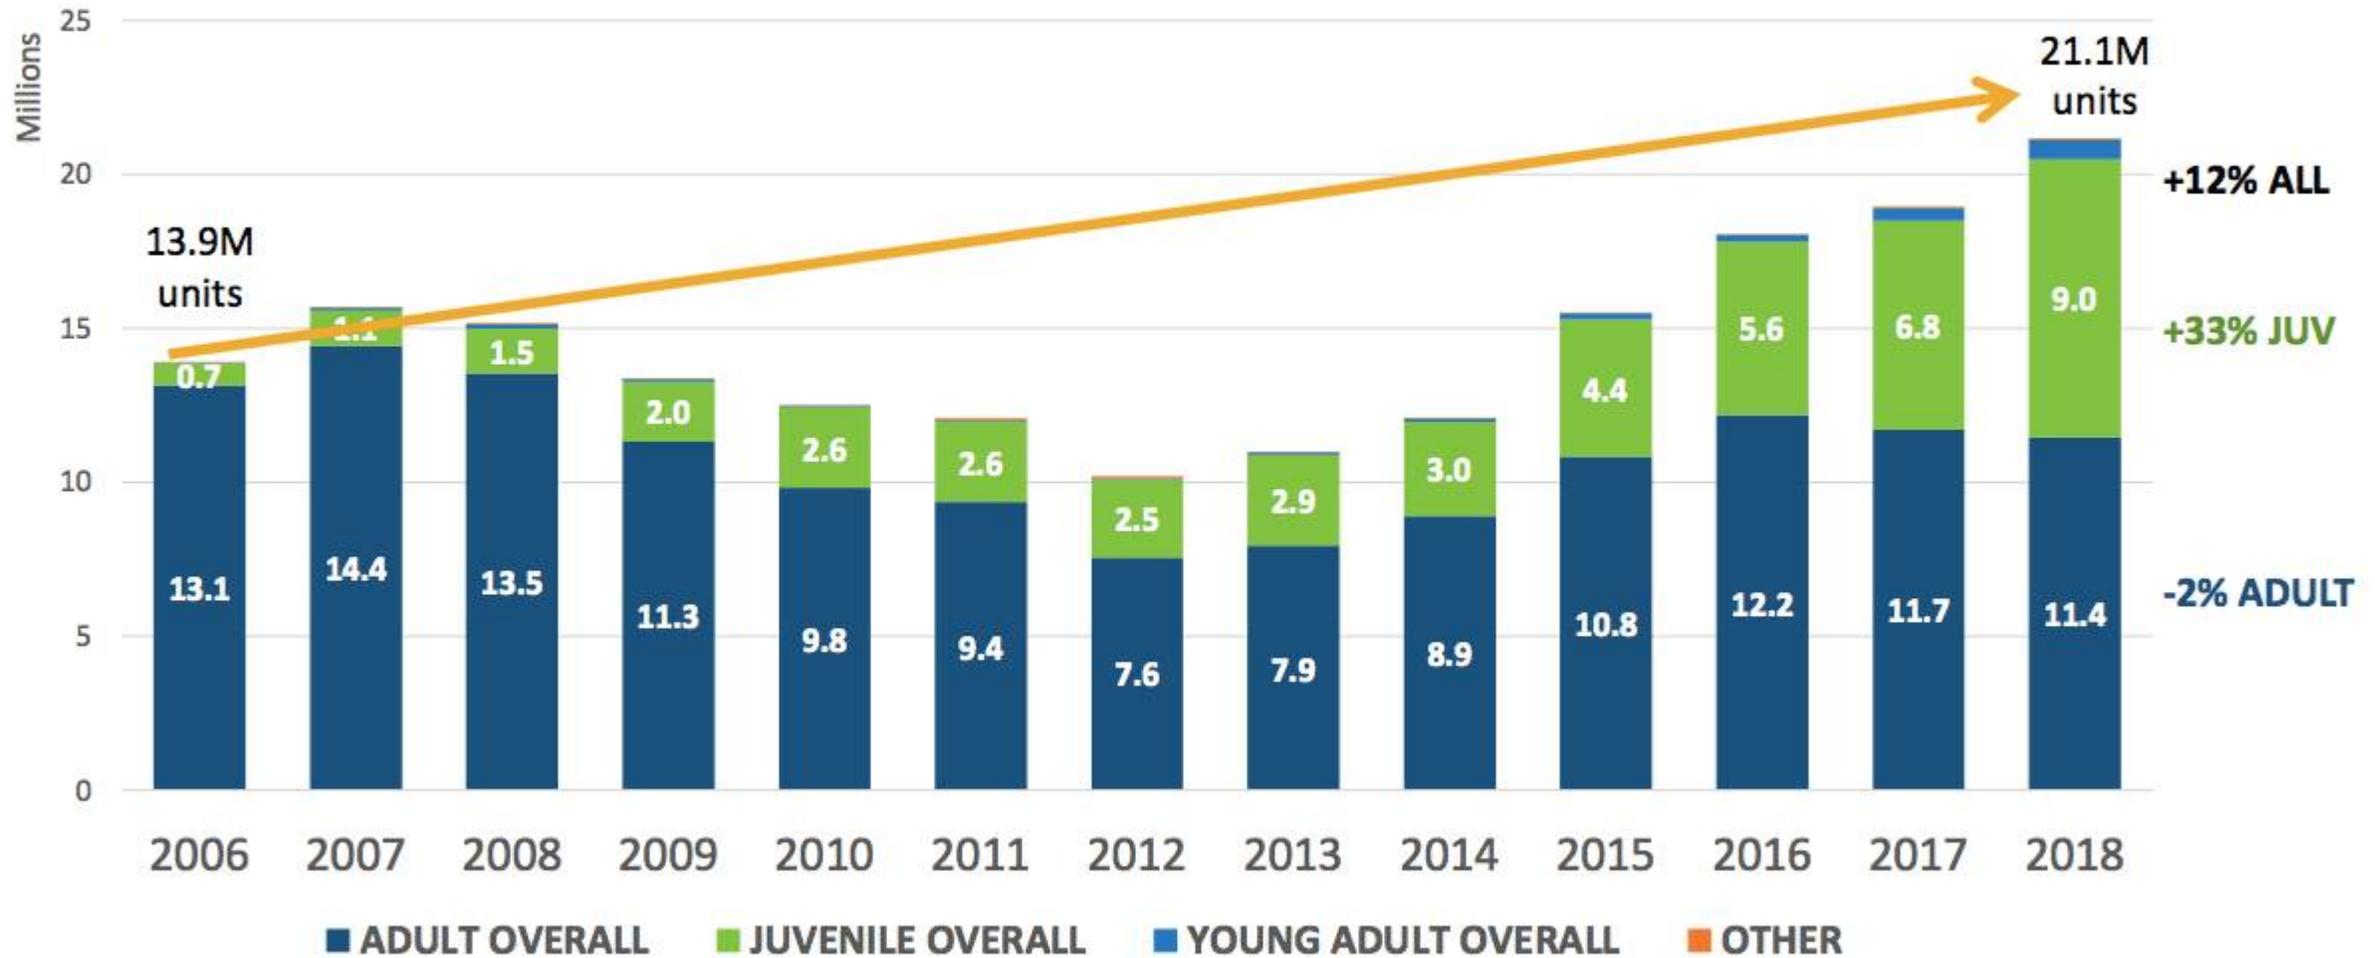

- In 2018, DC Comics announced they were adding Zoom and Ink imprints to address the needs of middle-grade and YA markets
- In 2019, Penguin Random House announced RH Graphic, which will begin publishing middle-grade and YA books in January 2020
- In 2018, Marvel Comics moved into partnership with IDW to publish kids single-issue comics based on Marvel properties, but with the intention to reach more markets
- Boom!, Lion Forge, and Vault all have dedicated YA imprints
